

Samuel Roukin is best known for his role as the villainous John Graves Simcoe on AMC's TURN: Washington's Spies.

Roukin began his career as an actor in British theater including roles in Trevor Nunn's Hamlet at The Old Vic; Padraic in The Lieutenant of Inishmore at Leicester Curve; For the National Theatre, Bijan Sheibani's The Kitchen ; Sir Nicholas Hytner's His Dark Materials and Henry IV Parts 1 & 2. Roukin also spent a season at The Royal Shakespeare Company in the lead role of Pip in Declan Donnellan's adaptation of Great Expectations. Most recently on Broadway, Roukin played Valvert in The Roundabout's production of Cyrano de Bergerac.

On TV he can be seen in Counterpart, Agents of Shield, The Librarians, The Magicians, Salem, Housewife 49, Appropriate Adult, and Richard II, produced by Sam Mendes. Roukin's feature film debut was in the Oscar®-nominated Happy-Go-Lucky, directed by Mike Leigh. Other films include Jane Campion's Bright Star, David Yates' Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Equity and the 2020 Feature A Call To Spy.

Roukin has voiced over 40 audio books and in the past year alone has won three Earphone Awards for his work.

He is currently working on the new animated series Pantheon, for AMC.